

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1839.

AN HONEST SUB-TREASURER. Mr Cannon, of New Orleans, and formerly receiver of the public moneys, in that city, was charged by the Government with defalcation. He has lately had his trial, in the U. S. District Court, and the Jury, after thoroughly investigating the accounts, between the Government and Mr. Cannon, acquitted the latter of all indebtedness. The N. O. True American, after noticing the result of the trial, makes the following remarks:

"It will be remembered that Mr Cannon was reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, as a defaulter to a very large sum more than one hundred thousand dollars, we believe. It now turns out that no such sum is due, nay, not one cent. Well, who has the money? Levi Woodbury, or some of his creditors, or clerks, no doubt. A transcript of Mr Cannon's account, sent from the Treasury Office was read on the trial. It bears evidence on its face of the most systematic dishonesty, neglect and carelessness. Some paid out by Mr Cannon, by direct orders from the Department, were not credited to him, and some made, and which he had been used by the Department, are also left uncredited. The great object of the accounts in Washington seems to be to show the funds of the Government to be in any other hands but their own."

"At the next Congress a new vein must be opened, we must see how much money has been pocketed by Levi himself, and with which he thinks proper to charge others. But what is most vexatious, is to see an innocent Sub-Treasurer, (so rare, precious, and wonderful a creature,) harassed with suits by his ungrateful Government. Moreover, we are told, that he was sued, without any previous amicable demand, or direct information of the balance against him. An exception to the suit was taken, on the ground that the law enacted, that suits should be instituted only when a party refuses or neglects to pay a balance reported against him, shall be sued &c. Now Mr. Cannon says that he never neglected or refused to pay; for no demand was ever made, and consequently the neglect was on the other side. He has received no communication from the Treasury Department, though his books three years ago showed a balance against him of two hundred thousand dollars! But this is not all. Mr Cannon intends to move for a new trial, with a hope of getting the Government exonerated, for he asserts that there is a balance in his favor, amounting to several hundred dollars."

"We particularly commend this case to the Hon. H. A. Wise. We hope it will find a conspicuous place in his memorandum book."

"The elections in Virginia take place on the fourth Thursday of May. The result of the election in this State is looked for with a good deal of interest. Both parties are active, and no doubt fully awake to the importance of carrying so influential a State. The New-York Star remarks—

"It cannot be denied that the influence of Virginia on the South has always been powerful, hence a decision in favor of the present administration in the ensuing election will be most favorably construed, and with reason. A reverse, however, will produce a very different effect. Should Mr. Van Buren lose ground in this Congressional canvass in Virginia, he cannot recover himself in time for the Presidential election, and with one or two exceptions every Southern State will go with Virginia. There is now nearly, if not quite, a whig majority in the House of Representatives. If Virginia swells the number, and it is by no means unlikely, a new aspect will be placed on affairs generally Non Parvus."

"Can any of our Loco loco friends inform us how Post office stock stands in the market to-day? Does the demand continue, and are holders firm at former rates? Or is stock light, and sales dull?"

"The Age says that Mr. Rimes was heretofore an efficient supporter of the Whig party. Here is a slight mistake. Mr. Rimes was heretofore an efficient supporter of the Administration party."

"Letters may now be sent from any part of the United States to Texas or the British Provinces without interruption, and without the payment of postage in advance."

The ability of England to go to war. In the British House of Commons, on the 11th of March, in debate on the Navy estimates, it was asserted that "such is the state of British harbors, that an enterprising enemy, with six or seven sail of the line, could sweep the channel and even threaten the metropolis." In 1835, the British had 107 sail of the line in commission, as asserted by Sir Robert Peel. Of these it appears 66 were employed on foreign stations. The rest were either cruising or detained for want of men. Since 1836, the Naval establishment has been reduced. But even according to the British full amount of 107 sail, it is to be questioned whether they could get a squadron of five ships ready for sea in three months. In the meantime Russia has a fleet of 23 ships of the line in the Baltic, all ready for action, and could be despatched to that quarter of the globe where the enemy could be most effectively annoyed. Direct this armament against the American colonies of the British, and their vast colonial possessions must be conquered, as the whole British force employed in North and South America was only forty sail, including ten gun brigs, on the 1st of December 1836. The loss is spread from the far north to the extreme south, and it is not probable that one third of it could be spared to defend any given point, which the enemy might be fit to attack."

"The following sensible commentary on the war 'patron' is from the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette:

"A correspondent signs himself 'A Patron.' 'A. A. A. for us to call.' But we doubt the propriety of his patronizing the title himself. We prefer a letter to a gentleman with the usual 'your obedient servant,' but we do not expect that in reply he will sign himself 'your obedient master.'"

Bremner's Excursions into the interior of Russia, a valuable work, which has lately made its appearance, in England, is the following description of the Foundling Hospital at Moscow, which is probably the most extensive establishment for the reception of infants, in the world:

"This building is among the most beautiful of the whole city, and probably ranks with the largest ever built in any part of the world. As may be inferred from the fact that it contains ample accommodation for nearly four thousand persons, young or old, and is divided into apartments for the managers, sleeping rooms, hospitals, lying in rooms, &c., all under the same roof. This establishment was founded by Catherine, for the reception of infant foundlings, many of whom are nursed and brought up in the house, but the numbers admitted are now so great, that thousands are sent out to nurses in the country, and brought back when old enough to begin to read. All are maintained till they are fit to be bound out to some trade, or if possessed of talent, till they can go to college and study for a profession, the whole being at the cost of the establishment, which sustains them till they can support themselves. The number of children supported by this house in 1824, was 12,775; in 1831, 23,788, and at that time four visit there were in all about 30,000, either in the establishment or supported by its funds. The annual outlay is now considerably above 20,000,000 roubles (200,000 £) in 1831 it was 17,283,983 roubles. On our first visit it turned out that the order for admission with which we had been favored from the government of Moscow was for another day. Our journey was not altogether fruitless, however, for this untimely visit brought us in for a scene not often to be matched, the sending off of the infants newly received to nurses in the villages, or to the farm belonging to the hospital. A long string of peasants' carts, filled with straw, was stationed in the open court, each in its turn drove up to the door, and in tumbled, sometimes two sometimes three or four stout clumsy women; these were the nurses. A little baby was next handed to each of them and she instantly gave it the breast. The little imp set bravely to work, and away drove the rustic equipage in gallant style. Two men on the steps were checking the name of the nurse and the number of the child as they entered the carts; for here children are counted pretty much as sheep are elsewhere. The little creatures were swaddled up as tight as pounds of butter going to market. We were surprised to see parents taking a parting kiss of some. We had believed that all belonged to those who were unwilling to acknowledge them, but now learnt that any one may send a child to the house, weaned or unweaned. All who do not wish, or are not able, to bring up their children, may leave them here without paying a farthing, so that, though at first strictly a foundling hospital, and though the majority of the children dependent on it are still of that description, yet this institution now contains many of other kinds. It is in fact, a sort of general nursing establishment."

MR. VAN BUREN AND HIS CABINET.

The following powerful philippic is taken from an eloquent speech by Mr. Kennedy of Baltimore, toward the close of the late Congress:

"In the embarrassments which have been brought upon our fiscal affairs, in the prostration of the agricultural, the mercantile, and the manufacturing prosperity of the country, the Administration has been able to suggest no adequate relief. We struggle along upon expedients. The vis usita of the nation, its intrinsic vigor, which not even misgovernment has been able totally to crush, has, by slow degrees, begun to revive prosperity of the land, but the Government has done nothing. Whatever might be expected from the patriotism, the virtue, the intelligence of the People, they have nobly realized whatever has been left in the Government has languished and faded in its hands. The guardians of the Treasury have fallen asleep—lethargies, unmatched in enormity, have been detected in the innermost shrine of the temple the very priests have robbed the altar the nation has but extricated itself from one debt to create another. The finances are in confusion, the revenue inadequate to the expenditure, our hard-money Government has fallen into a paper-manufacturing Government, our rulers are at their wit's end, all around are the signs of their doom, the warnings of their downfall. The truth stands confessed it is felt in every department of the public affairs that the President and his friends are incompetent to the crisis. THEY WANT ABILITY."

"Turn, sir, to the Executive mansion, and inquire, what they are who at this moment guide the fortunes of this land. An easy, indolent, luxurious chief, presides over a cabinet, of which it would be flattery to say, that it was a mere personation of feebleness. To the members of that cabinet, personally, sir, so far as a very limited acquaintance may warrant, I am willing to cordially consider and respect. I speak of them here as a public body. A more diversified compound of dullness, imbecility, and ignorance of official duty, a greater lack of energy, a more sorely perplexed, bewildered, and dismayed association of State counsellors, were never, perhaps, exhibited around a council table than may, at the present juncture, be seen in the daily, anxious conferences of this precious cabinet. Since the days of the Merry Monarch of England and his hair-brained crony Rochester, never were the destinies of a great nation intrusted to more incompetent hands."

"I might except from this censure, and do except, one who has the reputation of being a regular attendant at these council meetings. I doubt not, the first to come and the last to depart a personage more notorious than distinguished, and yet, sir, boasting no small claim to distinction. I mean that man of all work, whose marvellous exaltation from the kitchen up to the chamber nearest to the King is one of the most striking moral significations of the times. This, sir, is his administration. Whatever remainder of efficacy it has, is his; whatever of shrewdness, of cohesion, of malice, or of mischief it has, belongs to him. By his sufferance does every member of that cabinet hold his place or did, sir, for I trust his influence is drawing to an end. Yes, even the placid and placid chief himself has found his account in the good-will of this Mephistopheles. He is the link between the past Administration and the present, the conduit pipe by which the surplus popularity of the one is transferred into the waning circulation of the other; the ligament that still unites the small fortune of the polished and robust loving tenant of the palace to the more robust destiny of the grim and fearful lion that he has laid at the Hermitage."

"Not for this and for this only, sir, but for the whole cabinet array of impracticable, skilful, temporizing, expedient wangling statesmen, could I long but this, I no longer doubt, to the bottom of the pool of tainted party waters in which they are all engaged for reprobation. This day, sir, is not far distant when they and their guardian genius shall sink together in this easy tide, and be remembered no more."

A FRAGMENT.

FROM AN UNPUBLISHED NOVEL.

He now addressed Jenkins upon the subject of the political news of the day; and using the official cant of the Province, called the opposition a band of Rebels.

Jenkins had not been a superficial observer during his residence in Upper Canada; and believing that the people had grounds for complaint, he unhesitatingly expressed his disapprobation of the epithet used by the Divine.

"Rebel," said he, "is a term, which, when applied to a people complaining of measures and not of Government, appears to me entirely inapplicable."

"Government and government measures are synonymous in the minds of demagogues," returned the Parson; "and while they profess to aim their daggers at measures, they strike them in the very vitals of the Government."

"Could I think that such sentiments were founded upon a correct basis," rejoined Jenkins; "I should still oppose the use of epithets, which must inevitably prove impolitic."

"There can be nothing impolitic, in asserting a villain that we know him," surmised the Parson angrily.

"Yet," said Jenkins calmly, "therefore we approach him as such, we ought to be sure that he is not an honest man."

"No honest man can set himself up as a government, founded on equitable principles."

"But measures, however, may emanate from governments founded upon the strongest principles of justice; and no honest man can calmly see the Constitution of his country perverted."

"The Regicide," and the Parson with pointed emphasis, "has never failed to wipe his stain upon the hands of justice."

"Nor the minions of Tyranny ostensibly to invoke her," retorted Jenkins.

"I really regret, Mr. Jenkins," said the Parson with a malignant smile, "that you can advocate seriously so bad a cause."

"I must also, in turn regret, that you can support a system, that must eventually prove destructive to the government which you profess to support, for I unfeignedly believe, that there is no surer way of making rebels, than by the use of opprobrious epithets against those who offer opposition to the government measures."

"Loyalty, however, so easily displaced, could only hold a place upon the superfluities of the heart."

"Loyalty, as I conceive, has nothing to do with the political questions which agitate our colonies," said Jenkins.

"I am to understand then, that it is also your opinion that colonists owe no allegiance to kings?"

"You have misapprehended my meaning."

"If I have drawn a wrong inference, I beg that you will explain; for I must say, that your words, led me to the idea of our political independence."

"Loyalty then has no connection with our political controversies," answered Jenkins promptly, "because their object is to keep in violation the Constitution which has been given us by our Sovereign; and though the people of Upper Canada should inveigh, or even rebel against the misadministration of their Government, yet they might feel all the loyalty due from a subject to his sovereign."

"A strange doctrine, indeed, and I should not hesitate to suspect the loyalty of any man who could accede to it," rejoined the parson with undiminished passion.

"Your suspicion, then, could only be founded on the unconscious error, which you have just attributed to the liberals, that government and government measures are synonymous. In order therefore to take a right view of the subject, it will be necessary to separate our Constitution from the grievances which are the result of misadministration."

"But," said the Parson, "the grievances of which the people complain, are mere bugbears of their imagination."

"Then, why not dissolve the brain-phantom? For if the people's grievances are imaginary, the government can suffer no injury by gratifying their claims."

"A people, like a child, can be spoiled by indulgence. Grant them all they ask, they will still be dissatisfied."

"Indulgence implies a boon. Justice demands a right."

"Perhaps too, expediency would dictate a refusal."

"The denial of justice cannot under any circumstances be expedient."

"Your strict ideas of justice will answer very well in theory, Mr. Jenkins; but the man who would practice upon them, could not be a statesman."

"Statesman and villain must then, of course, be synonymous in your estimation," said Jenkins hastily.

"Policy, Mr. Jenkins, is a very necessary ingredient in a statesman's composition," returned the priest with measured words.

"That which would lead to inflame a people against their Government, cannot be good policy."

"I trust, nevertheless, you will admit that it would be impolitic to concede to a people who have become disaffected, however just their demands."

"Before I can admit a doctrine so apparently subversive of every ostensible principle, upon which political institutions are founded, I must know the ground upon which it is based."

"It is based upon the principle of self defence," said the divine, "for a single concession weakens the government, inasmuch, as it gives confidence to the disaffected, and causes disaffection to its adherents."

"Such policy then should be met by the bayonets of the people."

"If your expression is in allusion to the misunderstanding between the Canadian people and their government, I regret your imprudence," said the parson, abruptly.

"There can be no imprudence in expressing our honest opinion, especially as I have not espoused the cause of either party," returned Jenkins with studied indifference.

"I must then have grossly misunderstood the tenor of our discourse."

"My only object has been, to establish the truth of an abstract principle."

"Well then, to what kind of a government would your abstract principle lead?" asked the parson, with evident chagrin.

"To such an one, I hope, as would maintain the principle, upon which all governments ought to be founded," answered Jenkins.

"It would be a Republic, I presume," said the Parson, jeeringly.

"No," returned Jenkins, "it should be so constituted as to combine the honesty of a Republic."

"Does not the government of England do this?" asked the parson.

"Not perfectly," said Jenkins.

"In what does it fail?"

"In the independence of its constituent parts upon which the equilibrium of the whole depends."

"The equilibrium of the British government," has stood the test of centuries. Nor has it ever, to my knowledge, been before questioned."

"Nevertheless, it is liable to be injured," said Jenkins.

"How?"

"By the influence of the prerogative which places every office in the realm at the disposal of the King."

"I do not fully conceive your idea, I imagine Mr. Jenkins."

"More plainly then, this prerogative is an indirect bribe, glittering in the hands of the King, to tempt the integrity of the subject; for while the representative is bound by his oath, to maintain the constitutional privileges of his constituents, he knows that his only prospect of official preferment depends upon a subservient acquiescence, in the most arbitrary desires of his King. Thus the nation is liable to be enslaved by the consent of the very persons whom she has chosen to guard her liberties."

"For my part, said the divine, 'I think that the stream of office and of honor cannot flow from a fountain more pure, than the Prince's.'

"Indeed, I should be very sorry to see, the Lords or Commons clothed with such a prerogative, for I doubt not, that an aristocracy would result from the one, and a democracy from the other."

"Neither branch of the Government," returned Jenkins, "should be invested with such a power."

"You should give it to the People," said the parson enigmatically.

"No, no officer should receive his appointment directly from the people," answered Jenkins.

"How then are you going to remedy the evil of which you complain?"

"By having office emanate equally, from the monarchial and democratical branches of the government."

"Such a system could not last long Mr. Jenkins. The King and the Commons could not agree upon the man, and anarchy would be the consequence."

"The appointment, however, should not be immediate, from the branches, but should be made by a body constituted by them for the purpose. Therefore the collision to which you have alluded, could never take place."

"You would then, I perceive, have a fourth branch of Government."

"There should be a body, which I would designate the House of Mediators, one third of which should be appointed by the King, one third elected by the House of Commons, and the remainder elected by the two thirds so appointed and chosen. The mediators should have the exclusive power of appointing all civil officers of Government, while the King and Commons should have equally the privilege of nomination. This should be constituted the only Court for the trial of impeachments in the realm, and should have an equal voice with the King, Lords and Commons upon an amendment of the Constitution."

[Conclusion to-morrow.]

Measures are being adopted by the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore, to celebrate in a becoming manner, the close of the hundredth year of the existence of their Society as an independent sect.

Mayor of Lowell. Elisha Huntington has been elected to the office of Mayor of Lowell, made vacant by the death of Mr. Lawrence.

The Buffalo Commercial says: "We gave currency last week to a story from the St. Catherine's U. C. Journal, that five men had gone over Niagara Falls. We learn this morning, by the same paper of the 20th, that the 'awful plunge' was not taken."

Letters of John Smith with Pictures to match. Every body knows that the veritable Jack Downing has employed his cousin John Smith, of Smithville, Down East, to correspond with the New-York Mirror, about the Disputed Territory, and so on. Those letters with pictures to match, Colman, 8 Astor House, Broadway, has in press, and will soon publish, in the same style that he issued Jack's own letters. Sets a Smith, Esq. the author of both; has the richest and most natural Yankee dialect of any writer who has attempted to give the peculiarities of Jonathan. The wit is real, attic, and is something more than poor orthography—and the book will be worth putting beside the original letters of the original Jack Downing. N. Y. Dispatch.
